Career Prospects:

MSW graduates from the Social Justice & Diversity specialization work in a range of settings including health and mental health, education, social support, child and family services, disability assistance, criminal justice, immigrant settlement, substance use, housing, gerontology, and Aboriginal services. The majority of MSW graduates in this specialization work in community-based, non-for profit organizations, government or public work settings, community-based health centres, and public education.

Specific job roles and responsibilities of graduates from the Social Justice & Diversity specialization include: direct practice (e.g., counseling, case management), community development, advocacy, administration, project management, communication, and research. MSW graduates usually start in front-line, contract positions.

FAQ's:

When do I declare my specialization?

Year 1 of 2-year MSW: Submit your form to the Registrar, normally at the beginning of February

<http://socialwork.utoronto.ca/current-students/forms/>

Advanced Standing MSW: Indicate area of specialization when applying for admission to the program.

Who do I contact for advice on specialization selection?

Your faculty advisor. Advisors are assigned to students by the Associate Dean, Academic's Office. Notification is by e-mail at the start of September. If you do not know who your advisor is, e-mail Natasha Valentine:

n.valentine@utoronto.ca

Can I take core courses offered in other specializations to count as my electives?

Students are encouraged to identify courses offered in other specializations to supplement their learning in a particular area of practice (i.e., gerontology, mental health, management) to deepen learning in relation to their practicum or future practice goals.

Check with the Faculty Registrar to see whether there is space in another specialization course prior to the start of the term the course is offered. Typically, we will know if there is room in a course by the end of July for Fall Session courses and by the end of November for January Session courses.

What social work skills can I expect to gain from this specialization?

The Social Justice and Diversity Specialization fosters critical thinking and critical practice skills to address social inequality, exclusion and marginalization within Canada's diverse population. Courses in this specialization draw from a range of critical social work knowledge including: structural, feminist, anti-racist, indigenous, and anti-oppressive theories and approaches. Students will explore historic, contemporary, and transnational dimensions of oppression towards fostering social change, equity, and empowerment.

Working from a social justice and anti-oppressive lens, students will develop core skills related to observation, assessment, self-awareness, critical thinking, oral and written communication. Students will also learn skills related to intergroup dialogue, advocacy, community mobilization, policy analysis and policy advocacy; and research proposal writing. Critical reflexivity and praxis are key elements in this specialization.
